Herzog & de Meuron, founded by Jacques Herzog and Pierre de Meuron in 1978, has previously built a mountaintop restaurant that wrapped around a cable car station on the Chäserrugg mountain. The architects used spruce, creating a building that aimed to reference alpine architecture without becoming kitsch.

Herzog & de Meuron used a construction method that has now become standard practice. Instead of hiring a general contractor, they hired a construction manager who kept track of each design phase. The contractors hired were specialists and worked on just that phase or specialty. This expedited the time needed to accomplish and realize the design.
